Eban Is Fourth To Get High N. Y. Honour

New York City honored Abba Eban, Israel's Ambassador to the United States, at Madison Square Garden where eighteen thousand persons attending the Festival of Freedom, in celebration of Israel's eleventh anniversary as a nation, saw Mayor Wagner present the "Freedom of the City" to Mr. Eban.

He is the fourth person to receive this honor. The others were Admiral Robert E. Peary, discoverer of the North Pole, who received it in 1909; Dag Hammarskjold, in 1958; and former President Harry S. Truman earlier this year.

The Festival of Freedom, sponsored by the United Jewish Appeal of Greater New York, opened the person-to-person phase of the Appeal's campaign to aid 600,000 Jewish men, women, and children in twenty-six nations, including Israel, says the New York Times. Mayor Wagner is heading the campaign.

Mayor Wagner described Mr. Eban as "a brilliant diplomat whose eloquence matches his professional skill; a soldier who fought for his country's freedom; a statesman who played a major role in establishing its Government; a representative of Israel at the United Nations and in Washington who made known to the world at large his country's ideals and purposes."

A message from Premier David Ben-Gurion of Israel was presented by Yigael Yadin, former chief of staff of Israel's Army. The message characterized Mr. Eban as "the proud and gifted messenger of Jewish history, the authentic spokesman of the Jewish renaissance which is now taking root in the soil of our homeland and spreading its foliage over all the House of Israel."

Monroe Goldwater, president of the U. J. A. of Greater New York, who presided, urged intensive support of its person-to-person campaign. He said. "It will decide whether this really will be a happy birthday for Israel's people and for all the thousands who look longingly toward Israel as a refuge of freedom in which they too can make new beginnings."

The Rev. Dr. Abba Hillel Silver, Zionist leader, warned that Israel "is not yet fully secure politically or economically self-sufficient," says the New York Times. Dr. Silver cited Jews "from behind the Iron Curtain and from other parts of the world who are eagerly awaiting the moment when they can go to Israel." He said that governments under Arab pressure "are interfering with their emigration, but they cannot be permanently stopped.

In Israel an estimated total of half a million spectators lined the streets of Tel Aviv to watch units of the army, navy and border police march past and to see more than a hundred military planes, most of them jets, fly down the parade route.

Even by Israeli standards today's military exhibition was modest. Units of heavy and light tanks, self-propelled artillery and anti-aircraft guns and paratroops and infantry participated in the hour-long parade.

The only new equipment displayed was eight Super-Mystère interceptors, new French-made jet fighters. The Israelis say these are capable of matching the performance of any Arab country's aircraft.

Festivities brought to an end the year-long celebration of Israel's tenth anniversary, which attracted more than 75,000 visitors.

Israel was proclaimed a nation May 14, 1948, and came into being May 15, when the British mandate for Palestine was ended. By the Jewish calendar the proclamation day occurred on the fifth of Iyar, which fell this year on May 13.

In recounting Israel's accomplishments the following were cited: A population of 2,048,000, of which 221,000 are Arabs. The bringing to Israel in the last eleven years of more than 930,000 Jews from all over the world. The increase of cultivated farm land from 400,000 acres to more than 1,000,000 acres since statehood. A total industrial output four times as great as eleven years ago, with annual exports totaling $144,900,000, compared with $29,700,000 in 1949. The adding, during the last year, of 20,000 new workers to the total employed labor force.

But along with these advances there were a number of deficits burdening Israel. During the past year there was no appreciable advance in total exports. As a result the trade deficit, the amount that had to be spent abroad to exist compared with what was earned from exports, remained at approximately $333,000,000.

At least 20 per cent of the population still did not have guaran-

14,000 Jews Caught In Mid-Air By Slowdown From Rumania

Western diplomats hope the Rumanian Government will soon permit the resumption of Jewish migration to Israel on a sizable scale. The movement has been down to a trickle since February. The hopes are based on a belief that the same "humanitarian consideration" that caused the Bucharest regime to facilitate the migration earlier would bring about its resumption.

Particular concern is felt for the 14,000 Jews who had made all the necessary preparations to leave but were caught by the slowdown, says the New York Times. These people had already given up their Rumanian citizenship and disposed of their property. "Now they are caught hanging in mid-air," one diplomat said. "They have no jobs and no homes of their own."

Under Government regulations, emigrating Jews may leave with no more than the equivalent of 154 pounds of personal belongings. The earlier flow of Rumanian Jews to Israel began last September. In January more than 8,000 left the country. However, news of the movement brought strong protests from the Arab countries.

The first indication of the slowdown came in a Rumanian Government statement on February 25 that accused Israel and "imperialist circles" of using the migration to create bad blood between the Communist camp and the United Arab Republic. The statement declared that while the Government would continue "on humanitarian grounds" to allow Jews to obtain relatives in Israel, it would be [illegible] to dissuade them, letting them go only if they insisted.

Some Jews have continued to get exit permits, the diplomatic sources said. But almost all of these were said to have declared their intention was to join relatives in the United States or European countries. Only a few have left for Israel.

The number of Jews remaining in Rumania is a matter of dispute. Unofficial Jewish estimates put the figure at between 200,000 and 250,000, says the New York Times. However, Bucharest's February statement asserted that in the last Rumanian census only 146,262 persons had registered as Jews and only a small number of those wished to emigrate to Israel.

Thwart "Nazi Regime" Attempt By 15 High School Boys

An attempt by fifteen high school youths to set up a "Nazi regime of America" has been thwarted in Wayne, N. J. Dr. John Henry Martin, Superintendent of New Jersey township schools, said that the group had been broken up when teachers and school officials found pro-Nazi literature in the desks and lockers of some of the students involved.

Eleven youths from Wayne Senior High School and four from De Paul High School have been placed in the custody of their parents pending action by school officials and the Passaic County Juvenile Court, although no formal complaints had been filed.

The police refused to comment on reports that the youths had obtained Nazi uniforms, swastika armbands and other Nazi items from a concern dealing in war souvenirs, says the New York Times. It was also reported, although unconfirmed, that the youths had constructed a bomb from a piece of pipe and had acquired several weapons. The youths tried to recruit other students, but for the most part won only "contempt and antagonism," according to Dr. Martin.

Justice Relates Delinquency To Credit Buying

Justice Nathaniel Kaplan, of the Domestic Relations Court, declared in New York that too much instalment buying was one cause of family problems that produced juvenile delinquency. Citing the example of a young prisoner who had committed $50 of a $68 weekly income to time payments, the justice suggested an educational program to bring home to business executives "the fact that they may have gone too far in this extension of credit." He said he was opposed to laws regulating credit.

Justice Kaplan, who is chairman of the New York City Youth Board, was interviewed on the WCBS radio program "Let's Find Out." He recommended the establishment of a high school course that would teach the responsibilities of parenthood and family budgeting to prepare young people for marriage.

"I believe that should be part of the whole course for four years," Justice Kaplan said. "I think it is just as important, or more important, than training our children for the trades and the professions," says the New York Times. His court experiences indicated, he said, that family life is "much more demoralized" in the city now than it used to be. He suggested this might be because of a population shift in New York — middle-class families moving out and others coming in "that haven't had the tradition of a strong family life." In his work for the New York City Youth Board and in the cases that have come before him on the bench he has observed, Justice Kaplan said, that the worst parents "come from homes themselves that are completely demoralized," and the way to improve the homes is by teaching the children. Asked how successful he thought present church and school efforts have been in teaching family responsibility, he said, "I think all of us have fallen down."

Neurologist Was Author Of "Is Germany Incurable?"

Dr. Richard Max Brickner, a neuro-psychiatrist and assistant clinical professor of neurology at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, of Columbia University, died in New York at Mount Sinai Hospital. He was 62 years old. Dr. Brickner lived at 10 Hollywood Drive, Hastings-on-Hudson, N. Y. He gave up his private practice in New York two years ago to devote his time to research and writing.

The author of "Is Germany Incurable?", published in 1943, Dr. Brickner indicated that Germany was suffering from mass paranoia, which would have to be cured after the war, says the New York Times. He explained that Germany then would be a ward of the world and treatment supplied.

A graduate of Columbia in 1917, Dr. Brickner received his medical degree in 1923 from the College of Physicians and Surgeons. In 1925 he was made a fellow in pathology by the National Research Council and later did advanced work in neuro-anatomy in the Netherlands.

His book, "The Intellectual Functions Of The Frontal Lobes," was published in 1936. Besides devising treatment for the mentally ill, he did clinical research into multiple sclerosis. In World War II Dr. Brickner headed committees urging the establishment of psychiatric screening for draftees to eliminate those unfit for military service.

He had been on the staff of the Neurological Institute of the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center for twenty-five years and also on the staff of Mount Sinai Hospital. He was a diplomate of the American Board of Neurology and Psychiatry.

A past president of the New York Neurological Society, Dr. Brickner was also a founder of the Multiple Sclerosis Society, says the New York Times. He belonged to the Harvey Cushing Society, the New York Academy of Medicine, and the Alpha Ome-

South African Jews Dedicate Memorial To The Six Million Victims Of German Nazis

The South African Jewish community dedicated a memorial to the 6,000,000 victims of Nazi Germany's anti-Semitism. About 2,500 persons, including a member of the Israeli Knesset, or Parliament, and the Jewish Mayor of Johannesburg took part in a ceremony at the West Park Cemetery.

The memorial is a bronze array of six heroic fists, each clutching a giant shofar, or ram's horn. The shofar has played a central role in Jewish ritual for thousands of years, says the New York Times.

In the monument the shofars are held vertically and so arranged that the open ends of three of them face and nearly fit the open ends of the other three. Thus the overall effect is of an archway made up of three separate arches, each broken through the top. Beneath the central arch and guarded by the great fists is an eternal light. It was lighted by Reuben Zygielbaum, a survivor of the Warsaw ghetto.

The memorial cost £16,000, about $40,000. It is the work of Herman Wald, a sculptor, and was undertaken under the sponsorship of a communal committee and the South African Jewish Board of Deputies, the central organization representing all Jewish groups in the Union. One of the speakers was Edel J. Horwitz, an attorney who is president of the Board of Deputies.

The theme "Thou shalt not forget" is inscribed on the base of the memorial in Hebrew, Yiddish, Afrikaans, and English. Mr. Horwitz dwelt on this in a speech that had a wholly unintended but nevertheless ironic application to the surrounding climate of South African race relations.

"Neither we nor the world at large," Mr. Horwitz said, "dare forget that these things were committed in our day. The challenge is not only to the German people but to all of us to remove the unclean thing from our midst, to remove the race prejudice and race arrogance, the indifference to the fate of our neighbors, which make such barbarities possible."

The Jewish community now numbers about 115,000. About half of them live in Johannesburg. Jewish emigration since 1939 has been only a trickle, according to Gustave Saron, secretary of the Board of Deputies. Jews have been active and successful in many aspects of South African life, says the New York Times. Among them are some who sympathize with the Government's policy of apartheid or strict racial segregation, and others who oppose it.

The visiting Israeli was Rabbi Mordecai Nurock, a former leader of Latvian Jews, now a member of the Knesset. Mayor Ian Maitz, of Johannesburg, wore a cocked hat, purple robe, and gold chain of office. He spoke in Afrikaans.

CLASS IN COOKERY

one-quarter pound butter
pinch of salt
one-half pound cottage cheese
one cup flour

Cream butter and cottage cheese. Add salt and flour. Mix thoroughly until it forms a stiff dough, and set in the refrigerator for thirty minutes.

Filling

one and one-half pound cottage cheese
pinch of salt
two tablespoons flour
one teaspoon cinnamon
one-half cup raisins
one-quarter cup sugar
two eggs

Mix above ingredients thoroughly for filling. Sugar and raisins are optional. Remove dough from the refrigerator. Take a small piece at a time and roll it as thinly as possible. Brush with melted butter, then place filling on the dough and roll it up. Place in a buttered baking tin. Bake at 350 degrees for forty-five minutes. Slice. Can be served hot; or cold with sour cream.

Mrs. Max Cohen,
4170 Linton Avenue, Montreal.

MOCK CHEESE CAKE

one-quarter pound shortening
eighteen graham wafers
three eggs
one tin condensed milk
juice of one and one-half lemons

Melt butter and crush wafers. Add melted butter to wafers and mix. Add three egg yolks to mixture and beat well. Also add one tin condensed milk and the juice of the lemons and beat well. Place egg whites in separate dish and mix until stiff; fold in slowly. Bake in moderate oven for one-half hour.

The Loan Company In Istanbul That Lasted

A tumbledown Venetian palazzo on a remote street in Istanbul houses a loan institution that is unique in the annals of the Joint Distribution Committee. For over 35 years the Istanbul loan "kassa" has played a vital role in the affairs of the Jewish community of Turkey. And it is still very much alive, so much, in fact, that the latest chapter in its long story is one of the most fascinating.

Founded in 1923, it was one of a chain of similar institutions started after World War 1 by the American Joint Reconstruction Foundation which had been founded by JDC and the Jewish Colonization Association (ICA). These loan societies played an important part in reviving Jewish life in Europe in the years between the wars. But when Hitler's armies swept over the continent, they all perished in the general holocaust, all but this one.

After the war the job had to be done all over again — and JDC did it, this time with the help of Claims Conference funds and again, in some countries, of ICA. Today there are 35 such loan institutions operating in 18 countries. In the last 14 years they have made low interest loans to the amount of about $20,000,000. These have enabled over 60,000 Jewish families to improve their economic condition. This includes not only families in Europe, but also a substantial portion of the refugees settled in Israel, Australia, South America, etc.

In the meantime, the Istanbul "kassa" went its way, still operating on its original capital. In spite of the on-going devaluation of Turkish currency, it has remained second only to the Paris loan society in the number of loans made each year. Noticing, however, that the number of loans was gradually diminishing, JDC sent a representative to Istanbul last year to investigate. What he found there had to be seen to be believed.

Located at the top of a steep cobbled medieval street, the palazzo is in a state of incredible dilapidation, he reported. Its time-blackened stone facade bears a crumbling Venetian coat of arms and a dim plaque to the memory of a minor 18th century French essayist. Within its gloomy depths, the floors are rotting away and there are gaps, like broken teeth, in the balustrade that mounts the once magnificent staircase.

At the head of the stairs, the loan office itself presents a scene out of Dickens. Four elderly officials, three men and one woman, work on tall stools at shoulder-high writing desks. No firm ever had more loyal employees. Through bad times and good, through wars and devaluation, they have stuck to their posts. All four have worked there since the office opened in 1923. With many more applications for loans than can be granted, there just hasn't been any money to repair the premises, they said. Every dollar must be used to achieve the maximum return in human welfare. "If we spent fifty dollars to fix the floor, it might mean that some poor peddler couldn't borrow the money to replenish his stock," explained a white-haired official.

With human lives at stake like this, there is no semblance of stagnation about the office. Because of inflation, the society's working capital has diminished in value to less than $12,000. But what is left is still in active circulation, even though the number of loans has had to be sharply reduced, from 1,028 in 1952 to 324 in 1958. Also, the maximum loan that can be made now is only 500 Turkish pounds (approximately $60).

Clients come and go, small shopkeepers, peddlers, artisans, shabby middle-aged men with anxious faces. Some have to leave empty-handed. Others go out bearing the precious paper that means the bit of new stock or fresh supply of materials that will help feed their families for a few weeks more. From this humble milieu the JDC representative went on to confer with the directors of the loan society. Here he was in a different setting. All highly-educated and responsible members of the Jewish community, the board includes three lawyers, a number of well-to-do businessmen, a member of parliament and a high banking official. Men used to dealing in millions of dollars, they give their time to the modest affairs of the loan "kassa" out of a sense of civic duty.

If this story had the conventional ending, JDC would have come to the rescue with a generous infusion of additional capital. And, indeed, it would have liked to do so. Under the existing Turkish laws, however, it is impossible for a foreign organization to buy shares in a Turkish cooperative. JDC and ICA are still working on the problem. But for the moment nothing can be done.

This does not mean, however, that after all these years the loan institution is finally doomed to destruction. A campaign to raise money by selling shares in the company has been set in motion by the directors, and the local Jewish leadership has made a magnificent response to it. To date, the sum of 440,000 Turkish pounds (approximately $50,000) has been subscribed, payable over a four-year period. Of this, 110,000 pounds has already been raised in cash. With this added capital, it will be possible to jump the loan limit from the equivalent of $60 to $350. While this to Americans may not sound like much in terms of purchasing power, in Turkey it is a substantial sum. It is enough, in fact, to change the whole make-up of the loan applicants from artisans and peddlers to small merchants and businessmen, whom it will enable to make a permanent improvement in their economic status.

• JEWISH PERETZ SCHOOLS •

Threshold dinner, to mark the completion of the New Peretz School building, had as chairman Mrs. H. M. Caiserman. Cantor Solomon Gisser, of Shaare Zion Synagogue, sang, accompanied by Louis Burko, pianist. The guest speaker was Dr. Sol Liptzin, Professor of Comparative Literature and chairman of the department of Germanic and Slavic Languages at City College, in New York. He is the author of a number of books, the latest of which is "Generation of Decision", which examines the effect of American culture on Jewish survival. Louis Zuker, presented a gift to Daniel Freedman and Morris Gorelick who took part in the ceremony of turning the sod for the new school. H. A. Miller, president, conducted the appeal and a considerable sum was raised. J. Zipper, principal, introduced the speaker. Seated at the head table were: Dr. S. Liptzin, Mrs. S. Blanshay, president, Council of Pioneer Women; S. Broder, chairman, Farband division; Mrs. H. M. Caiserman, chairman, of the L. Zuker jubilee building fund; Daniel Freedman, vice-chairman, of the building committee and Mrs. Freedman; M. Kravitz and Mrs. Kravitz, vice-president of the Pioneer Women's Organization of Canada; H. A. Miller, president of the Jewish Peretz Schools, and Mrs. Miller; Mr. and Mrs. I. Rubinovitch; Mr. and Mrs. B. Segal, president of the Women's Auxiliary; A. Shurem, executive director of Histadrut; Mr. and Mrs. M. Wolofsky, Mr. and Mrs. J. Zipper, L. Zuker, chairman of the board of directors; H. I. Cralmer, vice-president of the Schools, and Mrs. Cralmer; Mr. and Mrs. S. Goldstein, president of the Parents Teachers Association, of the Schools. Following is a summary of Dr. Sol Liptzin's address: A Golden Age of Jewishness is a possibility on this continent. Whether this possibility becames a reality depends upon our generation, the generation of decision. Anti-Semitism has never been more than a mild irritant in America. The basic friendliness and tolerance of the American environment dissolved Colonial Jewry and pre-1880 Jewish communities in the common melting pot. Since then, America has witnessed three generations of Jews: The first generation, from 1880 to 1914, mostly immigrants from Eastern Europe, formed a Jewish enclave in the large metropolitan centers. The second generation, from 1914 to 1948, were bi-cultural but engaged in flight from Jewishness. The third generation, since 1948, are Americans of Jewish origin, whose Jewishness ranges from minimal to maximal. There are both forces of decay and forces of regeneration working in their midst. These forces are likely to continue. The question is: in what proportion and what can be done to influence the outcome? Among the most important constructive steps is the building of Jewish schools, so that Jewish wisdom, the product of millennial group experiences, might be handed down from generation to generation. Out of the new classrooms, such as those projected by the Peretz Schools, trained by experienced teachers and able administrators, there should emerge a well-educated Jew, one who will not seek escape from his past because he will know the beauty and value of that past, one who will not be indifferent to the weal and woe of the Jewish present because he will be aware of the unity of the Jewish people in all lands, whether they speak the solemn Hebrew, the intimate Yiddish, or the newer tongues, one who will have faith in a creative Jewish future because he himself will be participating in this future, he himself will be contributing towards the Jewish treasures of art and letters and thought and wit.

Miss Eleanor Schatz wore a blue dress with white polka dots, styled with a sheath skirt finishing in a flared panel at the back; and a V-neckline. Mrs. Schatz, mother of the bride-to-be, wore a tan sheath dress, cut with a V-neckline, embroidered with seed-pearl-beading; and had a corsage of pink roses. Miss Fraida Schatz, the honoured guest, wore a turquoise-blue organdy dress, styled with an apron effect draped to one side; and which had cap sleeves and a V-neckline. She had a wrist bouquet of white gardenias. The head table centerpiece was composed of vari-coloured spring flowers, on a pink cloth.

David Philip, son of Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Franklin, 38 Robina Avenue, was called to the Reading of the Law, in celebration of his bar-mitzvah, at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue. He is the brother of Stephen, aged sixteen years; and of Alan, six; grandson of Aaron Franklin, 444 Dundas Street West. At a dinner, at the Synagogue, two hundred guests were received. Mrs. Franklin wore a navy-blue silk shantung dressmaker suit; with a pink flowered hat. Seated with the above at the head table were: Rabbi and Mrs. Walter S. Wurzburger; Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Newman, cousins of the bar-mitzvah boy; and Mr. and Mrs. S. Tomarin, great-uncle and great-aunt, all of St. Catharines, Ont. The head-table decoration consisted of a centerpiece of yellow, white, and pink-toned daffodils; a white birthday cake, trimmed with gold-colour, inscribed in blue, and in the shape of a Star of David; all arranged on a white table-cloth. The individual tables had vases of similar flowers, arranged on blue table-cloths. Stephen, brother of the bar-mitzvah boy, was master of ceremonies. Dr. I. M. Cass, cousin of the bar-mitzvah boy, recited the blessing. Victor Sefton, president of the Parent-Teacher's Association of the Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue Talmud Torah School; and Mr. Franklin, the father; and Alan, brother of the bar-mitzvah boy, spoke. Aaron Franklin, grandfather, asked the blessing over the ceremonial challah. Out-of-town guests present were: Mr. and Mrs. M. Rebzen, great-uncle and great-aunt; Mrs. Max Alexandroff, cousin; Mrs. S. Atos, and Miss Doris Adelstein, all of St. Catharines, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. Irving Horowitz, great-uncle and great-aunt, and sons, Ralph and Sidney; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Gelman, cousins, all of Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Mrs. E. Silverstein and daughter, Miss Judith Silverstein, of Rochester, N. Y.; and Mr. and Mrs. A. Rebzen, great-uncle and great-aunt, of Brantford, Ont. Mr. and Mrs. Franklin received one hundred relatives that evening at their home, at a buffet-reception. Stephen took moving pictures during the afternoon and evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Salz, 7 Ridelle Avenue, entertained at their home in honour of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Janet Salz, to Dr. Melvin D. Charendoff, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Charendoff, 14 Kainona Avenue, for one hundred and thirty guests. Receiving, Mrs. Salz wore a navy-blue French lace sheath, embroidered with iridescent sequins on the bodice; and corsage of Talisman roses. Mrs. Charendoff, mother of the groom-elect, wore a polished cotton, princess dress with a charcoal-grey and white flower design; thin velvet shoulder straps; and velvet bows fastened below the knee, on the softly-flared skirt. Her corsage was of white carnations. Mrs. H. Charendoff, grandmother of the groom-elect, wore a deep beige, lace sheath dress; matching lace hat; and corsage of yellow roses. Miss Janet Salz, the honoured guest, wore a turquoise-blue, silk peau de soie dress, made with a scooped neckline in front and back, fitted bodice embroidered with jewel beads; and a puffed, harem underskirt, with overall beading. She had a wrist bouquet of a light mauve orchid, with white stephanotis. Those who poured the tea, were: Mesdames B. Wolofsky, of Montreal, Que., aunt of the groom-elect; R. Korpeck, of Rochester, N. Y., sister of the bride-elect; Jack Salz, sister-in-law of the bride-elect; S. Bolter, J. Rosen, I. Moranis, Sidney Rosen, and M. Rosen. The sweet table was adorned with a centerpiece of pink carnations and roses, and white giant snapdragons; and four pink tapers, tied with white bows. On the coffee table, there was a bouquet of pink carnations, large white snapdragons, and ferns, tied with a pink bow. Among the guests present were these family members: Mr. and Mrs. Jack Salz, brother and sister-in-law of the bride-elect; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Korpeck, of Rochester, N. Y., brother-in-law and sister of the bride-elect; Mr. and Mrs. Eric Merkur, Dr. Jacob Seeman, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Roth, all cousins of the bride-elect; Mr. and Mrs. Morris Charendoff, of Buffalo, N. Y., brother and sister-in-law of the groom-elect; Mrs. B. Wolofsky, of Montreal, Que.; and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Charendoff, Mr. and Mrs. A. Charendoff, Mr. and Mrs. David Charendoff, Mr. and Mrs. Saul Levine, James Charendoff, all uncles and aunts of the groom-elect; Mr. and Mrs. S. Werk, of Montreal, Que., cousins of the groom-elect.

Adoption Means Belonging

BY DAVID WEISS, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE BARON DE HIRSCH INSTITUTE AND JEWISH CHILD WELFARE BUREAU, OF MONTREAL

Adoption can have as many meanings as there are people who are interested in it. Everyone seems to be in favour of it, and almost everybody feels like an "expert" about it. Adoption has its tragedies, its wonders, and triumphs. It is one of the most rewarding and frustrating services in modern social work and child care programmes, especially in North America. Yet, like the weather, though everyone talks about and feels it, very few are real experts in understanding the causes and the meaning of such a phenomenon. Adoption as a human service requires knowledge, experience, and a certain quality of wisdom.

Those who know about adoption intimately, and are engaged in its processes in a professional and helpful way, realize the many delicate aspects involved. It has the breathless and awe-inspiring condition of almost "playing God". To attempt to play such a role would be patently impossible and even undesirable. As in any healing-service or teaching profession, knowledge develops and is deepened by experience through which people glean competence and skill. So, too, in adoption.

To appreciate the adoptive process means to have an awareness of how the very nature of family life has emerged in our culture, from primitive to modern times. Just as the family has gone through many social, cultural, and psychological changes, so too have the expectancies of children in family life. The adoptive way of acquiring a child has also undergone many changes. There is no question that, as society has achieved sufficient productive capacity and higher standards of living, adoption as a social and legal system of creating families has come into existence as the way of enabling the childless couple to fulfil themselves as a family unit. In the past, and in other cultures for that matter, the adoptive process may not even exist, as the attitude toward "the illegitimate child" or "unwed" mother has different meanings and status in other cultures or societies.

In our society, there has been a continuing and unbroken emphasis on the unitary and primary importance of the family group. Consequently, our social and religious systems are all based on the support and the protection of the family as the basic reproductive and developmental circle within which individuals are socialized and prepared for their adult roles. As economic conditions have improved by and large, and as the corresponding decline in large-size families has also taken place, the phenomenon of the sterile or infertile married couple has come into prominence. Correspondingly also, the attitude towards the unmarried mother and the offspring has shifted from a punitive and depreciated one to a more compassionate one. These various forces have come into a balance that seems to respond to the need for children by the unfulfilled married couple to acquire a child through adoption.

Religious and legal institutions have always been concerned about the family unit and the role of parents and children from the point of view of mutual rights and responsibilities, in order to protect the contractual relationship of the family group on which other social institutions are based.

In recent times community attitudes about adoption have been increasingly permeated by the social concern for the rights of all children regardless of their birth status. Consequently adoption is seen as a legal process by which children are given equal opportunities, regardless of how they were born. Perhaps in time this may change as the place of the unmarried mother is given a less rejected position in our society.

There is much more to be said about these and related subjects, but this would require a textbook for the reader. Suffice it to say that adoption is here with us and has taken on a fashionable and often a notorious aspect. However, for the people involved in adoption, this can mean the solution of many personal as well as social problems.

Certainly, for the unmarried mother whose emotional and personal difficulties are expressed this way, giving up the child for adoption can be a very healthy and healing experience if properly done with professional help. She recognizes that society is not hostile and rejective and she can clarify those forces which have compelled her through this experience, so that she can regroup the forces of her self in order to return to a more mature, adult living.

For the child, for whom a future of secondary status was implicit, there opens up an opportunity to be equal with other children, once he experiences the legal as well as emotional adoption which childless couples offer. For the childless couple, adopting a child fulfils the social and emotional need to be like others, and to have a meaningful purpose in relation to the partnership of marriage. There are other meanings, of course, and one often must tread carefully among the various mixed and disturbed motives and reasons for which people have babies out of wedlock, and childless couples want babies to cement or hold together a marriage which should not go on.

Taking all three elements together, and taking them as having been carefully understood and brought to a solution, one must ask: what does adoption truly mean to the adopted child and the adoptors, the couple which now has the opportunity to experience parenting or parenthood? This is usually asked in relation to what parents tell their adopted child, and how the adopted child responds to this difference which often causes difficulty in getting along with other children whose unwitting cruelties may often upset adopted children. It may often serve to initiate distorted fantasies in the adopted child and sometimes create difficulties in the relationships between the adopted child and his parents.

Many adopted children have these and other emotional feelings and needs to work out. Many adopting parents themselves often need to work this out too. One adoptive couple explain adoption as being equal to "loving". This is true, but not enough. If one is adopted and is an adoptor, to love always is superhuman, an impossible human state to sustain. It does not permit of individual differentiation as the child grows and even as the parents age and change. One knows from natural families that love is not the omnipresent emotion in family relationships.

Deep reflection will indicate that the basic and most meaningful meaning of adoption is "to belong", which is a growing, changing, and sustaining emotion and relationship, without which no human being can ever develop a self, or an independent personality. Without belonging, no one can have an identity, nor a home base to serve as a point of departure in growing up: in moving out into the world, and eventually in establishing a new series of belonging through the hyphenation process of friendship, marriage, and so on.

To belong is the crying need of the illegitimate child as it is of his unwed mother. They are outcasts, without the usual protection of most institutions in our society. Without a country to belong to, no individual has a place to call his own, and is what we have learned to call a "refugee". To belong is almost as instinctual a need as it is to eat, to experience warmth and protection from falling. Without belonging, one is truly a member of the herd, lost in a lonely crowd of human creatures, without definition, and therefore without capacity to create a place for oneself in human society.

Naturally this emotion and relationship are usually the accompanying developments in most adoptions, without even being expressed or consciously felt. This is the basis on which all children grow up in their own families and homes in which there are healthy relationships between parents and children. To belong gives people the chance, especially as children, to assert and experience themselves freely and safely, to love and be loved, to be hostile as well as to experience other people's grievances without being rejected or to be left to drift in a "no man's land". Many times the lack of this feeling and relationship of belonging are most pronounced in mentally disturbed and sick people who have lost their anchors in human relationships and therefore drift and wander in emotional Antarcticas.

If one belongs to a family made up of parents and relatives, friends and hopefully other brothers and sisters, one can move naturally and healthily into learning to belong to schoolmates, to schools, to play groups, to communities, and even to a people, whether it be a national or religious grouping. In this way one learns to belong to the larger brotherhood of man as well. This is what family life is all about to begin with, and in many respects is the way in which parents may often evaluate their own achievements: The child grows and moves out of this primary relationship to set up his own network of relationships through which he can help others to come into the world as his children. Through this process of belonging, with its love and care, response and responsibility, he contributes to the on-going process of human continuity.

It is no small thing to observe in biblical writings the stature and importance of Moses, the greatest prophet in Israel. He was closest to the divine power from whom has stemmed so much important religious and social history for the Jews and others. Yet, is it not perhaps more significant in these terms that Moses too was a child who had to be fostered and adopted by someone other than his natural parents? One must ponder the implications of this, for it seems that there must be a deep and profound lesson that can be read into this unusual status ordained for Moses by God.

For our purpose Moses suggests that all human beings are in a sense "adopted" by their parents. Parents are the human instruments used by God in whose image each of us is created. It is the responsibility of parents to give their "adopted" children, shared with them by the divine power, the opportunity to experience the human condition of belonging through which is carried out the fulfilment of man's destiny. And in helping others to belong, as by the adoption process here discussed, one fulfils the other Commandment of serving God through others to whom inevitably all of us return.

Yes, adoption is a popular and growing phenomenon of our times whose deep and profound meanings go beyond that of those directly involved in such an experience, go so deeply as to suggest that no one, regardless of how he or she is born into the world, is other than an "adopted" child whose parents in the process of extending human warmth, love, and belongingness, give us all the opportunity of becoming truly human personalities. And as parents give to us, we have the further opportunity of offering to children yet to come, the same important, ineffable experience of knowing what it is to be a human being.

Israel Air Force Head Is In U.S., Speaking For Bond Drive

Brigadier General Ezer Weizmann, Commander of the Israel Air Force, arrived in the United States for a tour of major communities on behalf of the Israel Bond campaign. His first appearance will be in Chicago, Ill., where he will be guest speaker at a dinner honoring Samuel Rothberg, of Peoria, Ill., national chairman for trustees of the Israel Bond Organization. The Air Force Commander, who was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General on Israel's eleventh Independence Day, is a nephew of the late Dr. Chaim Weizmann, first President of the State of Israel.

General Weizmann is a "sabra," or native of Israel, who was born in Tel Aviv 35 years ago. Formerly the Chief of Operations of the Israel Air Force, he distinguished himself in the War of Liberation, and previously in the R.A.F. during World War II. Following his service as fighter pilot with the R.A.F., in which he saw action in North Africa, he returned to Palestine in 1947 where he plunged into the effort to build an air force for the Haganah, the Jewish defense force. The embryo air force, which consisted of Piper Cubs, and called itself the Palestine Aero Club, supplied the experience and training for the test that came in the Arab invasion of Israel and the subsequent War of Liberation.

When Israel's independence was proclaimed in May, 1948, General Weizmann rose to the command of the first fighter squadron, which then consisted of a few obsolescent World War II fighters. In 1951, he went to England for studies at the R.A.F. Staff College for a year, returning home to set up the first Staff and Command Course of the Israel Air Force which he commanded for 18 months.
